All you need to do is to apply this to the keyboard and it will allow you to perform a series of keyboard macros in your preferred operating system. How does it work? The install-free version of KEYMACRO is supposed to be a simple application. All it needs you to do is to apply it to the keyboard. In a matter of seconds, you will be able to press "Alt" and "Ctrl" at the same time and the program will allow you to make specific combinations of those two keys. For instance, you could quickly paste text onto any online document or simply copy a large chunk of text into the notes section of your preferred program by pressing the "Alt" and "Ctrl" buttons at the same time. Should you require the full-featured version, you can either download and purchase it at the price of $39.95 (without a 30-day trial), or else purchase the product at the slightly higher price of $59.95 (plus the trial). As for the functions you can perform, you get the ability to set up different macros. These are simply a collection of keystrokes which are triggered by pressing a set of keys. There are 16 different ones included in the program as well. The list can include a wide range of items from web search, scanning all the bookmarks from your browser, controlling the volume, opening specific programs and many others. In addition to that, you can set up various combos of one key with another. These combinations include pressing "Shift," "Alt" and "Ctrl" at the same time, pressing "Win" (Windows), "Command" (Mac), "Alt" and "Ctrl" at the same time, or simply pressing "Ctrl," "Ctrl" and "Tab" at the same time.
