Activate the layers you want to apply effects to with the visibility key, just hover over it with your mouse. Visit the Blending Options page in order to find out more about the blending effects and browse more options that can be applied in Photoshop. Choose a destination folder to save the blend using either the Save As icon located on the parent group or the keyboard shortcut CMD+S. To access the same icon directly, click on the destination folder. Once your blending options are applied to this layer, you can either apply additional blending options over it directly from the image, or go back to the image to further refine the look. To do the same, simply click on the buttons on the bottom right of the window once you have applied your blending options. This will open the blending options for that specific layer. If you wish, you can select multiple layers to apply the effects to them. Just make sure to select the right ones. To do this, select any of the layers using the layer selection tool. Once this is done, click on the blending effect of choice or use the keyboard shortcut CMD+SHIFT+E. You can also select the ones or all the layers that you wish to apply the same blending effect at once by selecting them using the layer selection tool mentioned above. The same steps as before apply here. Include the layer you've created from the image. As you will see from the list, you can duplicate and explode your layer in any way you wish. Use the duplicated layer to recolor much in the same way you would when you create your own custom colors. Choose a recoloring mode, and even add metadata to them to describe more about the color you have selected. e3d0a04c9c
